Leap Year and the Calendar

A leap year occurs in those years ^{when} we add a leap day to February. In a leap year, February has 29 days instead of 28. We add a leap day because a solar year, ^{which} ~~that~~ is the actual time it takes for the Earth to travel around the sun, is different from a calendar year. According to scientists ^{who} ~~studies~~ ^{study} the Earth's movement, it takes 365.242199 days for our planet to make one full revolution around the sun. The Gregorian calendar, which people throughout most of the world use, has a 365-day year. By adding an extra day nearly every four years, the Gregorian calendar leaps forward and stays in line with the solar year. Emperor Julius Caesar, ^{who} ~~when~~ ruled Rome more than 2,000 years ago, came up with the idea for leap year. The Julian calendar, which was named after him, was very accurate but not quite exact enough. It had too many leap days. The problem was finally solved in 1582, when Pope Gregory XIII introduced a new calendar. The Gregorian calendar uses a formula that add ^s ~~s~~ leap days, but only in certain years. The years must have numbers that ~~they~~ ^s can be evenly divided by four. However, years ending in "00" are leap years only if they can be evenly divided by 400. Thus, the year 1900 was not a leap year, but 2000, 2004, 2008, and 2012 were. Italy, Portugal, Poland, and Spain, ^{where} ~~which~~ the Catholic Church had great influence, ⁽ⁱⁿ⁾ were the first to adopt the Gregorian calendar. Today, it is a widely used calendar that still has an effective leap year formula.

Italy, Portugal, Poland, and Spain were the first to adopt.....The Catholic Church had great influence in those countries.
